tech giants, and a tax on financial transactions (see Glossary 162) (see Chapter 4 – Fiscal policy). The European Union may levy taxes in certain areas based on the principle of subsidiarity. This will reduce the dependence on Member States' contributions and will allow for more effective taxation in certain areas than a Member State could do on its own. When establishing these Europe-wide taxes, the economic differences between Member States must be taken into account, whereby a Europe-wide tax must not increase inequality between Member States or hit poorer Member States harder.The EU should also be able to issue bonds to contribute to its budget. We call for deepened European defence cooperation and in the long
