1 The current economic system puts profit before people, everything and anything 2 on this earth can be commercialised beyond its limits, from labour to natural 3 resources, with gain and economic growth as a pretext. Our cities and 4 communities are being transformed due to aggressive and unsustainable tourism.
5 Our home towns and cities are crowded, the public transportation is often 6 designed to accommodate the demands of seasonal visitors instead of the needs of 7 the local community and traditional local long-life businesses are being 8 replaced by 24h supermarkets or souvenirs shops. These are some of the 9 consequences of touristification, a process by which a place changes as it 10 becomes an object of tourist consumption. This process affects both rural and 11 urban areas with the same principle and carrying very similar repercussions: the 12 locals are expelled from their neighbourhoods as the tourism industry damages 13 the labour market and the environment. Touristification affects particularly the 14 mediterranean countries, where low-cost flights and the rise of peer-to-peer 15 online platforms are thriving on the lack of courage of decision-makers, but the 16 main European cities and some rural areas are no strangers to this phenomenon.

17 Touristification turns local cultures to commodities, driving a loss of 18 traditional livelihoods, and creating tourism enclaves within our cities which 19 are completely disconnected from local communities. The economy of many Southern 20 European cities relies on mass tourism, a sector which is characterized by 21 having precarious jobs with low wages and suffering from seasonality. Overmore, 22 it has a negative effect on the housing sector, increasing the prices of rent 23 for the neighours of the city, who are generally poorer than most of the 24 tourists. People who work in the touristic sector, many of them young, report 25 cramped living conditions and barely earning a living wage.

26 Touristification also has a negative impact on the environment, increasing the 27 levels of pollution and damaging local ecosystems. Mass tourism generates a huge 28 amount of waste and water and energy consumption over the replacement rate, 29 which is critical in the planetary crises we are facing. Ecosystems in the South 30 of Europe are one of the most vulnerable to climate change. Besides that, the 31 lack of control of the number of seasonal visitors puts at risk both the locals 32 and the tourists in case of an eventual emergency, whether natural or

33 industrial, as the evacuation and emergency plans are often not designed taking 34 into account the enormous amount of tourists in the area.

35 Touristification is shaping the urban landscape, where tourists and their needs 36 are prioritized above local people's necessities. For instance, public space and 37 public transport networks are saturated with tourists. Moreover, gentrification 38 is another consequence of the touristification, since long-term residents and 39 businesses are displaced due to the increasing property value led by 40 implementation of touristic accommodations (hotels, apartments, Airbnbs...). In 41 fact, the social, economic and environmental changes caused by this model of 42 tourism have also had a negative effect on our health. Touristification 43 intersects with other social injustices, such as racism, sexism, and ableism,
44 and certain groups may be excluded from tourism opportunities or may face 45 discrimination in tourism settings.

46 A special reference needs to be made to the rupture of social bonds provoked by 47 the touristically-induced gentrification. In the case of the short-term rentals, 48 as a result of the high popularity of such digital platforms, the traditional 49 neighborly relations have been disrupted. The constant replacement of renters, 50 who do not give the impression of becoming integrated in the local culture, 51 provoke the suspicion of the rest of the inhabitants and even fear by the 52 elderly as the latter ones feel they lack stability. Therefore, many values of 53 the once-established notion of the «community» have been lost

54 Mass tourism practices such as the all-inclusive packages also have strong 55 negative impacts in local economies and societies. This type of vacation - 56 offered by big companies such as Thomas Cook or Tuir- includes all of the 57 expenses associated with a holiday, from the flight to accommodation, meals and 58 activities. However, they do not benefit local economies. The type of work that 59 this model of business creates, often for young people, women and migrants, is 60 an archetype of precariousness. One of the groups affected the most by this 61 model is the hotel housekeepers. During the past years, these workers, who are 62 mostly women from migrant and working backgrounds, reported that they are forced 63 to work at an inhumane pace. They are overworked with horrible consequences for 64 their health: muscular pain due to the repetition of movements, irritation of 65 the respiratory tracts due to the exposure to chemical products, and 66 neurological and mental health problems caused by the stress and anxiety as they 67 worry they can be fired in case they are not able to deliver.

68 Overall, touristification and mass tourism are potential generators of social 69 inequalities, and imply growth models that promote social injustice through the 70 exploitation of people and nature. Decision-makers have the power to take 71 control of this situation by tackling the main consequences in the market like 72 the rising price of housing, by limiting the number of visitors and pushing for 73 a change of model, and also by ensuring that the workers of this sector are treated in line with labour rights and human dignity.

75 For all that, the Federation of Young European Greens calls on:

76 ● Local, regional and national governments to design and implement policies that 77 promote a different model of tourism, based on sustainability and the well-being 78 of the local communities, while mitigating the negative impacts of 79 touristification that we are already experiencing.

80 ● Local governments to cap on licenses for tourist apartments, hotels and 81 resorts in tensioned areas, due to ecological and social reasons, and include 82 tourist taxations and limiting the number of tourists to mitigate the effects of 83 this sector.

84 ● To apply strict labour controls in the tourism sector to avoid job insecurity, 85 which is not allowing youth to live decent lives.

86 ● The European Union to enforce legally binding environmental protection from 87 tourism, and include the destruction of our natural areas (forests, coastal 88 areas, water bodies) due to tourism in the list of environmental crimes.

89 ● To make sure affordable housing options are available for people in 90 touristified areas, implementing rent control and implementing inclusionary 91 zoning method, that is to determine which neighborhoods are compatible with 92 short-term rentals for tourists so as to limit the consequences of this 93 phenomenon's overspreading and gentrification.

94 ● The European Union and state members' to stop subsidizing massive tourism 95 activities and fossil-fuel activities and prioritizing alternative modes of 96 travel, like cycling or public transportation.

97 ● To promote other less-known sustainable areas which have the capacity to 98 withstand the impact of tourism and thus to redirect the crowds of visitors
99 whose stereotypic holiday choices contribute to the degradation of classic 100 destinations.

101 ● To promote the diversification of Southern economies, to make them more 102 resilient to planetary crisis, such as the climate emergency or the war in 103 Ukraine.
