

R2 A2: European Students at Risk programme

Proposers

Protests

Motion text

Insert from line 36 to 37:

Union, which can provide rapid assistance in emergency circumstances and ensure the right to education.

Given the increasing persecution of student activists, it is non-negotiable that the European Union applies pressure on governments to respect human rights and democratic principles. This includes advocating for repealing repressive laws like those in Georgia, especially for countries aspiring to join the EU. The EU should extend its support by hosting and protecting these young activists.

Reason

The EU must actively pressure governments to uphold human rights and democratic values, and to provide sanctuary and support for persecuted students, safeguarding their basic human rights.