Political Platform text

From line 1129 to 1133:

~~In order to reduce the impact of the economy on the environment, it is also important to deal with the negative impacts of globalisation. While we recognise some of its benefits, it has both social and environmental consequences and favours major companies over small business.~~While globalization has brought the world more diversity and tools for exchange, we must take a systemic look at who is profiting from the opening of the world. Current trends of digitalisation and energy transition should not give grounds for the growth of new neocolonial mechanisms. We support, where feasible, relocalising (see Glossary 142) the economy, starting with the production of
