Young Greens South Tyrol

Dear members of the Ecosprinter's Editorial Board

I'm Gabriele, a somewhat recent graduate in Languages and Cultural Mediation and an even more recent member of the Young Greens South Tyrol. While acquainting myself with the tools and platforms the FYEG has to offer, I've stumbled upon some Ecosprinter issues.

I was and still am very impressed by the pieces that were published, not only due to the choice of topics, but mostly for the drive they always manage to convey. There's true passion and interest behind each of them and I truly believe that's a core element to further discussion and education. Sharing stories about both individuals and ideas kept every issue interesting and true to the different realities we all experience.

I've always had a passion for writing, journalism and literature (my latest interest was russian literature, currently exploring to find the next one). I'm very fascinated (and very critical) about the world of media and how it reaches the public; platforms like Ecosprinter have the potential to bring attention to different topics and give a voice to people who need it. I'm extremely interested in everything that has the potential to create further discussions and serve as fertile ground for new ideas, as they'll be fundamental to deal with the challenges we're approaching as members of newer and older communities.

During my studies I've focused mainly on the areas of mediation, ethnology, human rights and linguistics. While I consider myself lucky, having had the chance to live and study in different cities, these settings also gave me true insights into the issues that young people, especially working students, have to face. I'd love to take part in a project that allows for issues such as these to be discussed; having access to work and education is and always will be a political topic. Even more so if we consider that in a country like mine (Italy), our government seems to try and make very sure that students don't have easy access when it's time to vote.

If given the chance, I'll make sure that the voices of Ecosprinter's writers can keep sparking discussions and reach as far as possible.

Kind Regards,

Gabriele
