Insert from line 51 to 52:

erosion, and loss of organic matter are reducing the capacity of land to retain water and withstand shocks, while monocultures increase vulnerability.
We strongly condemn the manifestations of 'green colonialism' and predatory corporate extractivism in semi-peripheral regions and candidate countries, such as the 'Jadar' lithium mining project by Rio Tinto in Serbia. Under the guise of contributing to the global green transition, these corporate mega-projects threaten to permanently destroy vast areas of fertile agricultural land, pollute vital freshwaters, and displace rural communities, effectively sacrificing the environmental safety of the European periphery to maintain the overconsumption of the global core.
