- Enable independence in and out of school through self-regulated study. Support pupil-led clubs. Offer schemes for free or reduced-cost cultural and sports activities that do not require class or school involvement.

Reason

Our current education system is designed to create mindless factory workers; to address this issue, it is not only important to improve educational quality through better materials, more funding, and better staffing, but also to enhance students' independence. This should happen both in schools and outside of them. A common problem with cultural and sports activities is that their accessibility is often tied to participation within the school or class, limiting them outside these settings and creating the impression that attending these events is something to be done only in a formal school setting, not of the pupil's free will.
